pies will be stationary or else have begun to go backward in population, while many of them will have already gone very far backward.

Hope for the Future.

"There is much that should give us concern for the future. But there is much also which should give us hope. No man is more apt to be mistaken than the prophet of evil. After the French revolution in 1890, Niebuhr hazarded the guess that all civilization was about to go down with a crash, that we were all about to share the fall of third and fourth century Rome—a respectable but painfully overworked comparison. The fears once expressed by the followers of Malthus as to the future of the world have proved groundless as regards the civilized portion of the world; it is strange indeed to look back at Carlyle's prophecies of some 70 years ago, and then think of the teeming life of achievement, the life of conquest of every kind and of noble effort crowned by success, which has been ours for the two generations since he complained to high heaven that all the tales had been told and all the songs sung, and that all the deeds really worth doing had been done.

Battle Must Go On.

"I believe with all my heart that a great future remains for us; but whether it does or does not, our duty is the soldier's duty; it is to go on with utmost vigor to his allotted task; and bear himself as valiantly in defeat as in victory. Come what will, we belong to peoples who have not yielded to the craven fear of being great. In the ages that have gone by the great nations, the nations that have expanded and that have played a mighty part in the world, have in the end grown old and weakened and vanished; but so have the nations whose only thought was to avoid all danger, all effort, who would risk nothing, and who therefore gained nothing. In the end the same fate may overtake all alike; but the memory of the one type perishes with it, while the other leaves its mark deep on the history of all the future of mankind.

A Nation's Influence.

"A nation that seemingly dies may be born again; and even though in the physical sense it dies utterly, it may yet hand down a history of heroic achievement, and for all time to come may profoundly influence the nations of what it has done. Best of all is it to do our part well, and that the nation to see our blood live young and vital in men and women fit to take up the task as we lay it down; for so shall our seed inherit the earth. But if this, which is best, is denied us, then at least it is ours to remember that if we choose we can be torch bearers, as our fathers were before us.

Special Civilization.

"The torch has been handed on from one generation to another, and it is our duty to keep it burning brightly. It is our duty to work out the problems of government for, of, and by the people, while at the same time doing the International duty of a great power. But there are certain problems which both of us have to solve, and as to which our standards should be the same. The Englishman, the man of the British Isles,

"It must be a spirit of broad humanity; of brotherly kindness; of acceptance of responsibility, one for each and each for all; and at the same time a spirit as remote as the poles from any form of weakness and sentimentality. As in war the soldier's duty is to do cruel wrong to the brave man whose life his cowardice jeopardizes, so in civil affairs it is revolting to every principle of justice to give to the lazy, the vicious, the dishonest and dull witted, a reward which is really the robbery of what braver, wiser, abler men have earned.

Man Must Help Himself.

"The only effort to help any man is to help him to help himself, and the worst lesson to teach him is that he can be permanently helped at the expense of some one else. True liberty shows itself to best advantage in protecting the rights of others, and especially of minorities. Privilege should not be tolerated because it is to the advantage of a minority, nor yet because it is to the advantage of a majority. No doctrine that vests rights or freedom of contract can stand in the way of our cutting out abuses from the body politic. Just as Hitler can afford to follow the doctrines of an impossible and incidental revolution which, in destroying individual rights (including property rights) and the family, would destroy the two chief advances of the world, and the two chief reasons why either the advance or the preservation of mankind is worth while.

Blind to Duty.

"It is an evil and dreadful thing to be callous to sorrow and suffering, and blind to our duty to do all things possible for the betterment of social conditions. But it is an unspeakably foolish thing to strive for this betterment by means so destructive that they would leave no social conditions to better. In dealing with all these social problems, with the intimate relations of the family, with wealth in private use and business use, with the great problems of the one people, it is necessary to remember that, though hardness of heart is a great evil, it is no greater an evil than softness of head.

Special Problems Ahead.

"But in addition to these problems the most intimate and important of all which to a larger or lesser degree affect all the modern nations somewhat alike, or of the great nations which have expanded, that are now in complicated relations with one another and with alien races, have special problems and special duties of our own. You belong to a nation which presses the greatest empire upon which the sun has ever shone.

Working Out Government.

"I belong to a nation which is trying, on a scale hitherto unexampled, to work out the problems of government for, of, and by the people, while at the same time doing the International duty of a great power. But there are certain problems which both of us have to solve, and as to which our standards should be the same. The Englishman, the man of the British Isles, nation to nation, from civilization to civilization, throughout all recorded time, from the dim years before history dawned, down to the blazing splendor of this teeming century of ours. It dropped from the hands of the victor and the vanquished, of the man wrapped in luxury or love of ease, the man whose soul was eaten away by self-indulgence; it has been kept alive only by those who were mighty of heart and cunning of hand, and who were not afraid, providing it was worth doing at all, was of less matter than how they worked, whether in the realm of the mind or the realm of the body. If their work was good, if they were doing a thing of substance, then high success was really theirs.

The Great Advance.

"While freely admitting all of our follies and weaknesses, and yet more perversely to refuse to realize the incredible advance that has been made in ethical standards. I do not believe that there is the slightest necessary connection between any weakening of vital force and this advance in the moral standard, this growth of the sense of obligation to one's neighbor and of reluctance to do that neighbor wrong. We need have scant patience with that silly, but still prevalent, notion that kindness of character only accompanies weakness of character.

"On the contrary, just as in private life many of the men of strongest character are the very most lofty and most exalted morally, so I believe that in national life as the ages go by we shall find that the permanent national types will more and more tend towards those in which, with the greatest of high character stands higher; in which rugged strength and courage, rugged capacity to resist wrongful aggression by others, will go hand in hand with a lofty scorn of doing wrong to others.

Justice and Strength.

"This is the type of Timoleon, of Hampden, of Washington and Lincoln. These were as good men, as disinterested and unselfish men, as ever served their country; and they were also as good men as ever founded or saved a state. Surely such examples prove that there is nothing Utopian in our effort to combine justice and strength in the nation. The nations of the world must themselves supply the antidote to the self-indulgence and love of ease which they tend to produce.

"Every modern civilized nation has many and terrible problems to solve within its own borders, problems that arise not merely from juxtaposition of poverty and riches, but especially from the self-consciousness of both poverty and riches. Each nation must deal with these matters in its own fashion, and yet the spirit in which the problem is approached must ever be fundamentally the same.

Spirit of Humanity.

"It must be a spirit of broad humanity; of brotherly kindness; of acceptance of responsibility, one for each and each for all; and at the same time a spirit as remote as the poles from any form of weakness and sentimentality. As in war the soldier's duty is to do cruel wrong to the brave man whose life his cowardice jeopardizes, so in civil affairs it is revolting to every principle of justice to give to the lazy, the vicious, the dishonest and dull witted, a reward which is really the robbery of what braver, wiser, abler men have earned.

Man Must Help Himself.

"The only effort to help any man is to help him to help himself, and the worst lesson to teach him is that he can be permanently helped at the expense of some one else. True liberty shows itself to best advantage in protecting the rights of others, and especially of minorities. Privilege should not be tolerated because it is to the advantage of a minority, nor yet because it is to the advantage of a majority. No doctrine that vests rights or freedom of contract can stand in the way of our cutting out abuses from the body politic. Just as Hitler can afford to follow the doctrines of an impossible and incidental revolution which, in destroying individual rights (including property rights) and the family, would destroy the two chief advances of the world, and the two chief reasons why either the advance or the preservation of mankind is worth while.

Blind to Duty.

"It is an evil and dreadful thing to be callous to sorrow and suffering, and blind to our duty to do all things possible for the betterment of social conditions. But it is an unspeakably foolish thing to strive for this betterment by means so destructive that they would leave no social conditions to better. In dealing with all these social problems, with the intimate relations of the family, with wealth in private use and business use, with the great problems of the one people, it is necessary to remember that, though hardness of heart is a great evil, it is no greater an evil than softness of head.

Special Problems Ahead.

"But in addition to these problems the most intimate and important of all which to a larger or lesser degree affect all the modern nations somewhat alike, or of the great nations which have expanded, that are now in complicated relations with one another and with alien races, have special problems and special duties of our own. You belong to a nation which presses the greatest empire upon which the sun has ever shone.

Working Out Government.

"I belong to a nation which is trying, on a scale hitherto unexampled, to work out the problems of government for, of, and by the people, while at the same time doing the International duty of a great power. But there are certain problems which both of us have to solve, and as to which our standards should be the same. The Englishman, the man of the British Isles, in his various homes across the seas, and the American, both at home and abroad, are brought into contact with utterly alien peoples, some with a civilization more ancient than our own, others still in, or having, but recently arisen from the barbarism which our people left behind years ago.

"The problems that arise are of well nigh inconceivable difficulty. They cannot be solved by the foolish sentimentality of the stay-at-home people with little practical experience, and those out-and-out theories of the political nursery which have such limited applicability amid the crash of elemental forces. Neither can they be solved by the arbitrary authority of the man who, whether at home or on the rough frontier of civilization, adopt might as the only standard of right in dealing with other men, and treat alien races only as subjects for exploitation.

Races All Differ.

"No hard and fast rule can be drawn as applying to all alien races, because they differ from one another far more widely than some of them differ from us. But there are one or two rules which must not be forgotten. In the long run, there can be no justification for one race managing or controlling another unless the management and control are exercised in the interest and for the benefit of that other race. This is what our peoples have in the main done, and must continue to do, in India, Egypt, and the Philippines alike. In the next place, as regards every race, everywhere, at home or abroad, we cannot afford to devalue from the great rule of righteousness which bids us treat each man on his worth as a man.

Justice For All.

"He must not be sentimentally favored because he belongs to a given race; he must not be given immunity in wrongdoing, or permitted to cumber the ground, or given other privileges which would tend to the devaluation of merit among ourselves. On the other hand, where he acts in a way which would entitle him to respect and reward if he were of our own stock, he has that much entitled to the respect and reward if he comes of another stock, even though that other stock produces a much smaller proportion of men of his type than does our own. This has nothing to do with social intermingling, which is a matter of expediency, and which may be accompanied by a certain amount of self-control, respect for the rights of others, and hard and intelligent work to a given end. To more than such just treatment must be insisted, and less than such just treatment no man should receive.

International Duty.

"The other type of duty is the international duty, the duty owed by one nation to another. I hold that the laws of morality which govern the actions of individuals in their dealings one with the other are just as binding concerning nations in their dealings one with the other. The application of the moral law must be different in the two cases, but in one case it has, and in the other it has not, the sanction of a civil law with force behind it.

Courts and Police.

"The individual can depend for his rights upon the courts which themselves derive their force from the police power of the state. The nation can depend upon nothing of the kind; and, therefore, as things are now, it is the highest duty of every nation to send first people to keep themselves in such a state of readiness as to forbid to any barbarian or despotism the hope of arresting the progress of the world by the aid of their own arms.

"It would be foolish indeed to pay heed to the unwise persons who deplore disarmament to be begun by the 'very people who,' of all others, should not be the last to have any possible for. But we must reprobate quite as strongly both the leaders and the peoples who practice, or encourage or condone, aggression and iniquity by the strong at the expense of the weak.

Enforce the Law.

"We should tolerate lawlessness and wickedness neither by the weak nor by the strong; and both weak and strong we should in return treat with scrupulous fairness. The foreign policy of a great and self-respecting country should be conducted on exactly the same plane of honor, of insistence upon one's own rights and of respect for the rights of others, whether the other is an honorable man is dealing with his fellows. Permit me to support this statement out of my own experience. For nearly eight years I was head of a great nation and acted especially with the conduct of its foreign policy; and during those years I took no action with reference to any other people on the face of the earth that I would not have felt justified in taking as an individual in dealing with other individuals.

Look to the Future.

"I believe that we of the great civilized nations of today have a right to feel that long careers of achievement lie before our several countries. To each of us is vouchsafed the honorable privilege of doing his part, however small, in that work. Let us strive for the success of our country by doing our risk failure, spurning the poorer souls of small endeavor who know neither failure nor success. Let us hope that our own blood shall continue to the best of our children and children's children to endless generations shall rise to take our places and play a mighty and dominant part in the world. But whether this be denied or granted by the years we shall not regret at least the satisfaction that we have carried onward the lighted torch in our own day and generation. If we do this, then, as our eyes close and we go out into the darkness, our hands grasp the torch at least we can say that our part has been borne well and valiantly."

PIONEERS MEET TUESDAY NIGHT

Will Consider Home Building Site for El Paso Valuable Relics.

The Pioneers' association will meet Tuesday evening in the city hall to decide upon a permanent location for the Pioneers' home and museum which the association has planned to erect and for which money has already been subscribed. One of the locations for the home which has been suggested is Hart's mills at the head of the pass. It is understood that Juan S. Hart has offered to donate a tract of ground sufficient to allow an old time El Paso house of the simple adobe style to be erected there.

Should this site be decided upon, the building will be erected at once and the Pioneers' building made a permanent display place for the relics of early El Paso which are now in the possession of the association. Another place suggested for the display of these relics is in the chamber of commerce building.
